

SUPREME COURT OF TENNESSEE
BOARD OF LAW EXAMINERS

IN RE:

MENACHEM LANGER,
Applicant.

Docket No. 20-18

SUPPLEMENTAL POST-HEARING BRIEF

The Applicant, Dr. Menachem Langer, respectfully submits this supplemental post-hearing brief to respond to emails and attached materials provided to the Board from the email account of his ex-wife, Kristin Carver Crowe, on February 10 and 11, 2021, after the hearing.<sup>1</sup> The emails focus on the time period in 2017 when (a) Dr. Langer’s lawsuit for disability benefits had been pending for more than two years; (b) Dr. Langer was experiencing improvement in his condition following his late-2012/early-2013 relapse; and (c) Dr. Langer determined to attempt law school in lieu of indefinite disability payments. As discussed below, these things are not mutually exclusive. Dr. Langer respectfully refers the Board to the Declaration of attorney John Dupree, previously submitted, and submits additional information, as follows:

In early 2017, Dr. Langer’s lawsuit seeking disability benefits had been pending for a couple years. (Dupree Decl.; Tr. 99-100). Dr. Langer determined that he had reached “a crossroads” and did not want “to be a statistic.” (Tr. 99). Dr. Langer communicated with

<sup>1</sup> Dr. Langer notes the nature of the February 10 and 11 emails from his ex-wife to the Board as being similar in nature to rebuttal briefing, and would have preferred the opportunity to cross-examine his ex-wife especially given a distinct probability that the emails were drafted not by his ex-wife but instead by her husband, Daniel Crowe. See Tr. 19-20 for Judge Wade’s comments on Mr. Crowe’s character and credibility.

Dean/Judge Gary Wade and the Dean of Admissions, Rady Mathews, in the late spring or early summer, and decided to seek admission. (Tr. 28, 100).

Dr. Langer's ex-wife has asserted that taking the LSAT in 2017 was inconsistent with the claims in Dr. Langer's ongoing disability lawsuit. It was never a foregone conclusion that Dr. Langer could pass the LSAT. He took the exam in June 2017, and scored only in the 24th percentile. (Ex. A, LSAT Score Email). For an individual who had previously obtained an M.D. and an M.B.A., this low score is evidence that Dr. Langer continued to suffer disabling effects of his relapse. This score was no guarantee that Dr. Langer could successfully make it through law school.

Dr. Langer was formally admitted to law school on July 18, 2017. (Ex. B, Acceptance Email). It was only at this point that Dr. Langer could say with certainty that his relapse was not going to prevent him from attempting law school. Although he still could not say whether the effects of his relapse might prevent him from completing law school, he nevertheless instructed his attorney to settle and discontinue the lawsuit. (Dupree Decl.). He matriculated and was sworn into his law school class less than three weeks later, on August 7, 2017.

It should be noted that "disabled" under the Sun Life policy would mean "disabled from employment as CEO of a hospital." It is impossible to determine whether being sufficiently recovered to score in the 24th percentile on the LSAT and gain admission to law school necessarily implies no longer being disabled from employment as a hospital CEO. Within days of his matriculation, Dr. Langer's wife was able to testify under oath that Dr. Langer was still disabled. It is respectfully submitted that merely gaining admission to law school with low test scores is not evidence of ability to function as a hospital CEO – the two standards are distinct and unrelated. It is known to this Board that merely gaining admission to law school – particularly with low test scores – is not evidence of the ability to successfully pass the remaining hurdles to become an attorney.

In fact, by spring of 2018 it was apparent that Dr. Langer needed help to overcome the continuing effects of his relapse. Dr. Langer submitted to the law school information concerning his condition, including a letter from his neurologist, Dr. Sadiq. (Ex. C, Sadiq Letter). The school reviewed the materials and granted Dr. Langer an accommodation during exams for his slowed cognitive processing. (Ex D, LMU Accommodation).

The result was success. Dr. Langer was an individual with three prior degrees, who had been disabled by a relapse of his multiple sclerosis. He recovered to the point that he could score (only) in the 24th percentile on the LSAT, yet had the gumption to reject disability benefits and attempt law school despite ongoing disabling effects. He started law school without any accommodations for his condition, and asked for an accommodation only when it became clear that he needed it. The result of his hard work was that he is remembered by Dean Wade as a “solid student,” and is considered to be an attorney that the Dean would “be pleased to have” represent him in a case. (Tr. 18).

The story of Dr. Langer’s experience and efforts in 2017 is not a story of an individual taking inconsistent positions. It is a story of a highly intelligent man, debilitated to the 24th percentile by a relapse of a cruel disease, nevertheless having the commitment and courage to try and pursue a career rather than sit back and accept disability benefits. His success in doing so should be credited to him, and the fact that he overcame a disability should not be held against him as “inconsistent.”

CONCLUSION

Based upon the foregoing, the materials submitted to the Board, and the evidence presented at the hearing, it is respectfully requested that Dr. Langer satisfies all of the requirements for admission to the bar and should be admitted.

Respectfully submitted,

Re: Menachem Langer

Dear Professor Graves,

Menachem Langer is a patient under my care for the treatment of multiple sclerosis (MS) since July 2009. Dr. Langer is currently on treatment of a monthly infusion of Tysabri and Neurontin, which he takes daily. His symptoms include cognitive dysfunction which impacts his concentration and processing speed.

To be the most successful in achieving his goal of obtaining his JD, it would be beneficial for Dr. Langer to have additional time to take his exams. Please allow for time and a half on exams.

If you have any further questions please do not hesitate to contact my office.

Sincerely,

Saud A. Sadiq, M.D.
